The commissioner decided that it might be rectified by paying the usual tax for that purpose, and then put on the market without subjecting the owners to the payment of the tax assessed on the first distillation.

From a mass of details of the condition and promise of the growing grain crops recently published, it seems the general impression that the continuance of the late dry and cool weather has been of immense service to the country. Much corn is already gathered, and another fortnight like the past and the crisis of the harvest will be over. The copious rains which fell some time ago, though they delayed, did not damage the corn. The favorable change in the weather stopped the advance in corn, but great fluctuations are still expected, as the crops throughout Europe, with the exception of Russias, promise to be light.
